Inspired and fascinated by the books Ángel Gitano and Mil Besos, I could not simply reproduce so much beauty. Ruven Afanador's masterful photographic sessions in Andalusia are unrepeatable: the alchemy that arose there between the photographer and figures with the charisma of Israel Galván, Matilde Coral, Eva Yerbabuena, José Antonio and Rubén Olmo himself cannot be recreated.

My journey begins where those sessions end, and when I finish dreaming about them, unable to remember every detail or subject them to a logic that has been lost along the way, the urge to awaken emerges.

Afanador bursts into being from the tension between the fascination emanating from Ruven Afanador's photographs and my own fascination with all that mystery — so full of daylight and yet so nocturnal — that once fascinated Ruven himself.

I studied photography and I am the grandson of a photographer. Although I never pursued photography professionally, it has always been very present in my work as a creator of worlds and stage director. Through his extraordinary work in staging and evoking images, Ruven Afanador has prompted me to reflect on the vital kinship between photographic and choreographic composition: the physical challenge, common to both, of capturing life — something which, by definition, refuses to be captured.

Ruven Afanador observes flamenco through a distorting lens, shaped by dreams, desire and memory. If the elements of tradition are reassuring by definition, what happens when they become strange and unrecognisable? Afanador's surrealist gaze on flamenco is very close to the way of looking at the world that has nourished my work at the helm of La Veronal over the years: not to represent the world that exists, but to invent a new one.

Speaking about cinema, Estrella de Diego, whom I quote freely, once said: "We should enter the darkness without premeditation, with the film already under way, without knowing the programme beforehand, carried along by chance. We should sit down and surrender ourselves to our senses without preparing them, without directing them through opinions or synopses. We should go to the cinema in search of something other than the story being told. We should know that in cinema, as in life, one always ends up identifying with oneself, never with the character or the plot."

I would like people to come and see us in that way, as in certain dreams where we recognise the places, the people and the landscapes and, without fully understanding what is happening to them, know that they are speaking about us.

Marcos Morau

Ruven Afanador's gaze is not documentary: it does not offer history an archive of events, styles or personalities. Nor is it monumental: it does not seek to restore a glamorous, photogenic image of its subject. Afanador's gaze is driven by desire: it distorts its object and allows itself to be distorted by it. The object of desire — as Buñuel and Surrealism had already intuited — is dark by definition. Desire makes us ignorant, inexperienced, incompetent, because to desire is to fix our attention on what escapes, to focus on a disappearance. Desire composes its object, and sometimes invents it, simply so that it may continue observing it. In doing so, it produces another kind of knowledge: subjective, infallible and revelatory. The object reveals itself before our eyes, and reveals us in turn.

Approaching the multiverse of Andalusian folklore through desire, Afanador compels it to reveal itself, and in doing so reveals himself. As though dreaming of it, he allows the slips, deliriums and subconscious of flamenco to emerge, along with its impulses towards eros and death and its truths that cannot be documented. He unravels it through a thousand amplifications, like a grotesque and sumptuous world, an unimaginable body of shadow and light. As he gazes into the abyss of flamenco, he allows it to gaze back at him.

Our work is merely another link in this genealogy of dream and desire: it recounts — or perhaps betrays — our gaze upon Ruven Afanador as he looks at his models. And it speaks of photography as an astonishing event in which the world unfolds before the eyes. There is no plot: only caprice, as in Goya's memorable graphic series. Familiar themes and recognisable gestures, like masked characters belonging to a troupe of 'motifs', come together in the images as though summoning one another through association, analogy or attraction; or through an unrestrained game of metamorphosis, both angelic and diabolical. The Caprichos speak of nothing other than the image as miracle and witches' sabbath.

There is no photograph that is not suspended a sigh away — or a thousand and one kisses away — from the fire that consumes the image.

MARCOS MORAU & LA VERONAL

Choreographer

Trained in Barcelona and New York in photography, movement and theatre, Marcos Morau (Valencia, 1982) creates imaginary worlds and landscapes where movement and image meet and consume one another.

Marcos Morau graduated with the highest marks and also received the Extraordinary Award for Creation from the Institut del Teatre in Barcelona. His artistic knowledge is not limited to dance but extends to other disciplines such as photography and dramaturgy. He completed a Master's Degree in Dramaturgy Theory jointly organised by the Autonomous University of Barcelona (UAB), Pompeu Fabra University and the Institut del Teatre.

For more than ten years, Marcos has led La Veronal as director, choreographer and designer of sets, costumes and lighting. His work has been seen in more than thirty countries, and his schedule continues to take him to new cities and new audiences. His productions have been presented at venues and festivals including the Théâtre National de Chaillot in Paris, the Venice Biennale, the Festival d'Avignon, Tanz im August in Berlin, Romaeuropa Festival, SIDance Festival in Seoul, Sadler's Wells in London and Danse Danse Montréal, among many others.

In addition to his work with La Veronal, Marcos Morau is a guest artist with several companies and theatres around the world, where he develops new creations that consistently move between the performing arts and dance. These include Nederlands Dans Theater, Lyon Opera Ballet, Les Grands Ballets Canadiens, Spain's Compañía Nacional de Danza, Göteborg Opera Dance Company, Ballet du Rhin, the Royal Danish Ballet, Scapino Ballet, Carte Blanche, Ballet de Lorraine and Lucerne Opera Ballet, among others.

As the youngest recipient of Spain's National Dance Award, Marcos Morau has developed a language rooted in abstract movement and physical theatre. He has also received the FAD Sebastià Gasch Award, presented by the FAD Arts and Design Foundation, the Time Out Award for Best Creator and the Italian Danza&Danza Award for Best Creator of the Year, among many other distinctions.

His creations have won awards at numerous national and international choreography competitions, including the International Choreographic Competition in Hanover and competitions in Copenhagen and Madrid.

Since this year, Marcos Morau has been an Associate Artist with the Staatsballett Berlin, where, from 2024 onwards, he will premiere a new creation each year with one of Europe's largest ballet companies, affiliated with the Deutsche Oper, Komische Oper and Staatsoper Unter den Linden.

Alongside his creative work, Marcos Morau combines his artistic practice with teaching, giving classes and workshops on creative processes and new approaches to dramaturgy at conservatoires, programmes and universities, including the Institut del Teatre, the University of the Arts in Strasbourg and the Sorbonne Nouvelle in Paris, among others.

Morau's future work is opening up to new formats and languages in which opera, dance and physical theatre enter into an ever closer dialogue, seeking new ways to express and communicate within our constantly changing and turbulent present.

His international engagements and tours with La Veronal continue to take him to numerous festivals and theatres around the world.

In 2023, Marcos Morau was named Choreographer of the Year by the German critics' association for Tanz magazine, one of Germany's leading dance publications.

His work explores the creation of spatial-temporal bubbles driven by an aesthetic need for the epic, in which spectators, whether voluntarily or not, are immersed in abstract, hazy realities that interfere with their everyday experiences and expectations, shaping an attempt to find themselves in the gaze of others and to lose themselves in chaos. Both inside and outside the theatre.

RUVEN AFANADOR

Photography

For Ruven Afanador, touching the human soul through the photographic image is a vital imperative. It is a calling that has been with him since childhood walks hand in hand with his parents in his native Bucaramanga, Colombia, when he would watch, spellbound, the analogue retouching process in a local photographic laboratory. It is a choice reaffirmed throughout the more than thirty years he has lived in New York, and reflected in the same drive with which, only a few weeks ago, his lens captured yet another facet of Oprah Winfrey. His creative journey and global significance have been built millimetre by millimetre, with the discipline of someone who lives with the certainty that every dream can become reality.

Although he moved to the United States at the age of 14, he has never lost his awareness of his roots. In fact, he attributes some of the most distinctive features of his work to them. "I feel that Latin American photographers possess a certain passion and an endless source of inspiration. I see that very strongly in the Latin American photographers I admire," he says.

The volume of his voice contrasts with that of his images. Reserved in tone, his photographic portraits are a powerful aesthetic symphony. His visual universe is created through an intricate process of technical development and sensitive sophistication which, in both his commercial and artistic work, has earned Ruven Afanador a place among the world's finest photographers today, although his shyness often prevents him from openly acknowledging it.

From the Dalai Lama to Barak Obama, from Gabriel García Márquez to his beloved Rossy de Palma, the constellation of leading figures from film, music, science, religion, literature and television whose essence his lens has captured is as impressive as his travels and the multitude of publications and brands that regard him as the ideal visual artist for some of the most fascinating challenges of this age of images.

Elle, Rolling Stone, Vogue, Vanity Fair, The New Yorker, Madrid's El País, The New York Times, The Hollywood Reporter, Billboard and the Los Angeles Times are just a small selection of the publications whose pages have featured his images. Buenos Aires, Milan, Seville, Barcelona, Granada, Kyoto, Shanghai, New York, Los Angeles and Zurich are among the cities where his work has been exhibited, alongside what remains his greatest source of pride — because it was a dream he cherished from a very early age — his books.

Torero, Sombra, Ángel Gitano, Mil Besos and, more recently, Hijas del Agua are editorial works that reflect the very finest expression of his way of seeing the world, his artistic commitment and, above all, his humanist convictions.

It is a path that led him to Spain decades ago, where the most passionate side of the Iberian spirit captivated his sensibility indefinitely, weaving an intricate historical and aesthetic love affair that would permanently permeate his creative approach. This universe has become the subject of his photographic devotion, opening the door, through his androgynous visual language, to flamenco and bullfighting, among other cultural expressions. These projects have brought him not only significant recognition but also profound personal satisfaction.

His work is always imbued with an aura of admiration for every person he photographs, conveying one of the values humanity needs most: respect. He is as respectful as he is demanding. In his work, there is no room for error; every photograph is the result of a lengthy process of research, pre-production, production and post-production, confirming that his success owes nothing to serendipity and everything to daily commitment.

A keen observer of femininity, his portraits often reveal a distinctive savoir faire, an exact counterpart to the unique balance between strength of character and tenderness of heart associated with women from Santander. It recalls those afternoons when he watched his mother comb her hair, up to the moment when memory brings her back to him as what she will always remain: the guiding force of his heart.

Unafraid of emotional polychromy, his work is also inhabited by strokes of fire, exuding a homoeroticism as provocative as it is intoxicating, within a visual dynamic that always reserves some sensory surprise.

Proud of his Colombian origins, Ruven Afanador maintains an indelible bond with his country through an ongoing dialogue in which he gives workshops, stages exhibitions and, of course, develops projects such as Hijas del Agua. Together with artist Ana González Rojas, he created a series of works centred on Colombia's Indigenous women, producing what is undoubtedly one of the most eloquent love letters to native femininity in contemporary art.

Ruven Afanador is more than brilliant covers, flattering headlines, striking campaigns and countless exhibitions. He is a photographer, a visual artist: Colombian sensibility on a world-class scale.

Rubén Olmo (Seville, 1980) discovered his love of dance at an early age. At the age of nine, he entered the Seville Conservatoire, where he graduated in Spanish Dance and Classical Dance in 1996. His teachers there included Marisol Delgado, José Manuel Moreno and Pepa Coral, among others. During his training, he also attended classes at the schools of Manolo Marín, Carmen Montiel and José Galván, and took courses with Pedro Azorín, Juanjo Linares, Victoria Eugenia, 'Manolete', 'Güito', Mario Maya, José Granero, Javier Latorre, Aída Gómez, Nadín Astor, Antonio Canales, Teresa Nieto, Rosa Naranjo and Carmina Ocaña.

A year later, he joined Aída Gómez's Spanish Dance Company, where he performed as a soloist in Estamos solos, choreographed by José Antonio, Javier Latorre and Aída Gómez. He also took part in the Teatro de la Zarzuela production El barberillo de Lavapiés, choreographed by Ramón Oller.

He also worked as Principal Dancer, choreographer and Assistant Director with Rafael Amargo's company.

He was a teacher at the Centro Andaluz de Danza (CAD) from 2008 to 2019 and Director of the Ballet Flamenco de Andalucía (BFA) from 2011 to 2013. At the head of the Andalusian public company, he premiered the productions Metáfora (2012) and Llanto por Ignacio Sánchez Mejías (Gardens of the Generalife at the Alhambra, 2012).

He took part in productions including Permíteme bailarte by Aída Gómez; Jazzing Flamenco by Antonio Najarro; La horma de su zapato by Isabel Bayón; and El amor brujo by Víctor Ullate. Rubén Olmo has been Director of the Ballet Nacional de España since September 2019.

BALLET NACIONAL DE ESPAÑA

The Ballet Nacional de España (BNE), directed by Rubén Olmo since September 2019, has been Spain's leading public company for Spanish Dance since it was founded in 1978 under the name Ballet Nacional Español, with Antonio Gades as its first director. It is one of the production units of the National Institute of the Performing Arts and Music (INAEM), which forms part of the Ministry of Culture and Sport.

The BNE's mission is to preserve, promote and pass on Spain's rich choreographic heritage, embracing its stylistic diversity and traditions through its different forms: classical dance, stylised dance, folklore, escuela bolera and flamenco. It also works to bring Spanish Dance closer to new audiences and strengthen its national and international profile within a framework of full artistic and creative autonomy.

Maintaining a programme that combines new creation with the preservation of the traditional Spanish Dance repertoire and the ongoing incorporation of new works is one of the guiding principles of the current Strategic Plan. In this regard, the BNE has launched a new creative direction open to avant-garde approaches and emerging trends, inviting international choreographers and new creators to collaborate with the company. Within this context of learning and development, the BNE also organises workshops aimed at encouraging the specialisation and professional development of dance practitioners in both performance and creation.

To promote Spanish Dance, the BNE encourages both national and international touring, alternating large-scale productions with more compact formats open to experimentation. It promotes the sustainable financial management of all its productions and fosters cooperation between the different INAEM production units and other public institutions across Spain's autonomous communities, as well as public-private collaboration at national and international level.

In recent years, the BNE has developed initiatives and collaborations within the world of fashion and increased visits by conservatoires and dance schools from across Spain to its rehearsals. As part of its educational programme, it has organised various masterclasses for groups of children with different abilities and published the first Spanish Dance book and video game for children, entitled Bailando un Tesoro. As part of this commitment to outreach, the BNE has created its Friends' Circle and a merchandising product line.

Throughout its history, the BNE has received numerous national and international awards, including the New York Metropolitan Critics' Award for Best Foreign Production (1988); the Japanese Critics' Award (1991); the Critics' Award for Best Production (1994) at the Teatro Bellas Artes in Mexico; the El País newspaper Award (1999) for the production Poeta; the Critics' and Audience Awards (2002) for Antonio Gades's choreography Fuenteovejuna at the 6th Festival de Jerez; the Audience Award (2018) at the Festival de Jerez; the Cerinos Award (2018) at the Mérida International Classical Theatre Festival; the Teatro de Rojas Audience Awards in Toledo for Best Dance Production in 2008, 2010, 2012 and 2014; and, in 2010, the Festival Internacional del Cante de las Minas presented the company with its Extraordinary Performing Arts Award for its "magnificent contribution to the preservation and promotion of the finest flamenco".
